

SHINE DOWN

To me, “Shine Down” sounds like it could have been a George Harrison song. I can hear him singing this in my head. The subject, ‘when someone we love leaves this world’, is something we all face sooner or later. The yearning to be with them and see them again is painful, powerful, and beautiful. Sometimes we need a song like this to fill a hole that someone left behind. That’s why I end the song on a positive note. Shine Down is a ‘can’t miss’ opportunity.

“Shine Down my love, send me your love
Open your eyes and you will find
I’ll be with you all the time”
